ARE THE DISCIPLES ACTUALLY HAPPY?

RECORD SCORING. NONSTOP TRADE CALLS. A CHAMPION STILL LOOKING FOR MORE.

Two weeks into the season, the Denver Disciples have already managed to make their preseason concerns look a little ridiculous.

Before Week 1, the reigning champions were reportedly shopping aggressively, with owner Merrick Beaumont reaching out around the league and appearing more interested in reshaping his roster than defending it. Then the games started.

Denver responded with a historic Week 1 performance, setting the league record for most points scored by a team in a single week. Since then, the Disciples have looked balanced, dangerous and every bit like a contender capable of defending last year's title.

So naturally, the trade calls have continued.

According to multiple league sources, Denver has reached out to essentially every team in the league and may be the most active franchise on the trade market right now. Which creates a strange contradiction: the numbers say this is one of the best teams in the FFLA, while the front office continues to act like something still needs fixing.

Maybe Beaumont simply sees an opportunity to get even better. Maybe the constant activity is exactly why Denver remains near the top. Or maybe, somewhere beneath all the production, he still does not completely trust what he has built.

For now, the results are doing plenty of talking. The Disciples look strong, deep and very much like a team capable of another championship run.

Whether their owner actually believes that may be a different story.

“THE NUMBERS SAY THIS IS ONE OF THE BEST TEAMS IN THE FFLA, WHILE THE FRONT OFFICE CONTINUES TO ACT LIKE SOMETHING STILL NEEDS FIXING.”

SOMETHING BIG IS COMING TO THE FFLA

A MAJOR NEW LEAGUE DEVELOPMENT MAY BE ON THE HORIZON.

The FFLA has already spent this season pushing forward.

A new website. New presentation. New features. More ways than ever to follow the league. But if the rumblings around the FFLA are accurate, that may only be the beginning.

Multiple signs point toward something much larger being prepared behind the scenes — a new addition that could change the way the league operates and potentially become one of the biggest developments in FFLA history.

For now, details remain under wraps.

What exactly is coming? We can't say yet. When will it arrive? The expectation is sometime in the coming weeks. What we can say is that this is not being treated like another small website update or cosmetic feature.

This one could be different.

The FFLA has always found ways to make fantasy football feel like more than just setting a lineup every week, and whatever is being built next appears designed to take that idea even further.

So keep an eye on the league, watch for updates, and maybe don't get too comfortable with the way things currently work.

SHARKS

JETS vs LIONS »

On this week of Shark Tank, the Sharks are pushing their chips in on the New York Jets and Detroit Lions matchup. The Lions defense has given up 30-plus points in each of the first two weeks this season, and the Jets offense has looked good enough so far to put some trust in them on the road. We're predicting a Lions win, but don't be surprised if the Jets make them a little uncomfortable.

JETS START » Hall, Wilson, Mitchell.

JETS SIT » Sadiq.

LIONS START » Everyone.

TITANS vs GIANTS »

Our Sharks are out on the Titans and Giants. Not much needs to be said about the Titans, as they've shown basically nothing to inspire confidence so far. The loss of Jackson Dart will also be felt across the Giants offense. Despite the presence of Likely, Nabers, and Skat it's going to be hard to trust them without their young superstar under center.
